2. LI considered that MAO's treatment caused him to lose face because Communist members of the government are provided with many luxuries, whereas he is not. On the pretext that police protection would be inadequate if too many persons called on him, the police told LI to cut down on the number of dinners he offered to callers.

3. General TS'AI T'ing-k'ai** (蔡廷鍇), a member of the Government Council of the Chinese Communist Government, received a similar warning about having too many guests. He has refused to heed the warning.

4. General CHIANG Kuang-nai (蒋光鼐), a member of the Standing Committee of the Political Consultative Conference and of the Kwangtung Government Council, [REDACTED]
